Argentina and Chile have never been one of the top countries in sending students abroad to the US.

My office has come up with a comprehensive approach to promote our programs and services overseas as outlined in our strategic plan that was presented in December 2008. However, for Argentina, Chile and Brazil we are focusing on specific potential avenues to target students in those countries. We are using different resources that are available in each country to target our prospective students who may want to study in our community colleges. We are also looking to promote in Canada in the coming years.

For Chile, so far we have sent a number of emails to local representatives, the Chilean Embassy in the US, and the US Embassy in Chile to meet with them in March. In addition, we have contacted language institutions and other organizations located in Chile that sends students to the United States to learn English.

For Argentina, we have also sent emails to the US Embassy in Argentina and Argentina's Embassy in the U.S. A meeting has been set up with the Visa Chief at the US Embassy in Argentina. We have also contacted local representatives from language institutes and our former students from Argentina.

Currently, we are working with local organizations (including churches) and schools in Brazil to promote our programs. We are meeting with the US Embassy in Brazil to discuss the Fulbright scholarship that will be given out to students in Brazil to attend Community Colleges. We also will be working with other local organizations to promote and recruit students as well.

Since my office also oversees Distance/Online Education, as well as Business/Trade, we are also using online education to promote our programs, and hopefully, students overseas will be able to enroll in online classes to further their education. We would also like to encourage our own faculty, staff, administrators and students to be involved in the promotion of our educational services. I believe this has to be a systemic effort in order for it to work.
